City Council Message

This chance to write to you is a great opportunity to reflect. After all, if you had just a moment to speak to the citizens of Rexburg, what would you feel would be important to address?

Here's what I feel needs to be discussed: You can't help but hear these days about the uncertainty of our times. There is no doubt that things are quite rough in the world today.

Here at the City of Rexburg, we are keeping a close eye on our budget and acting with great caution to ensure the community's well being. Revenues are low and some changes have been made; we are doing our best to avoid possible problems.

However, and with all that in mind, I can sincerely tell you that I am more excited for our opportunities than I am worried about any potential difficulties.

Not only will we pull through and be okay, we're going to prosper and grow. We have a wonderful community with magnificent resources, people, and institutions.

I'm excited about the new City Hall building we've just purchased. It will be a good addition to our community.

I'm excited for the growth of BYU-Idaho and the public schools. And, I'm looking forward to working through the coming year's budget. We're going to be just fine... actually, better than just fine. We'll be great!

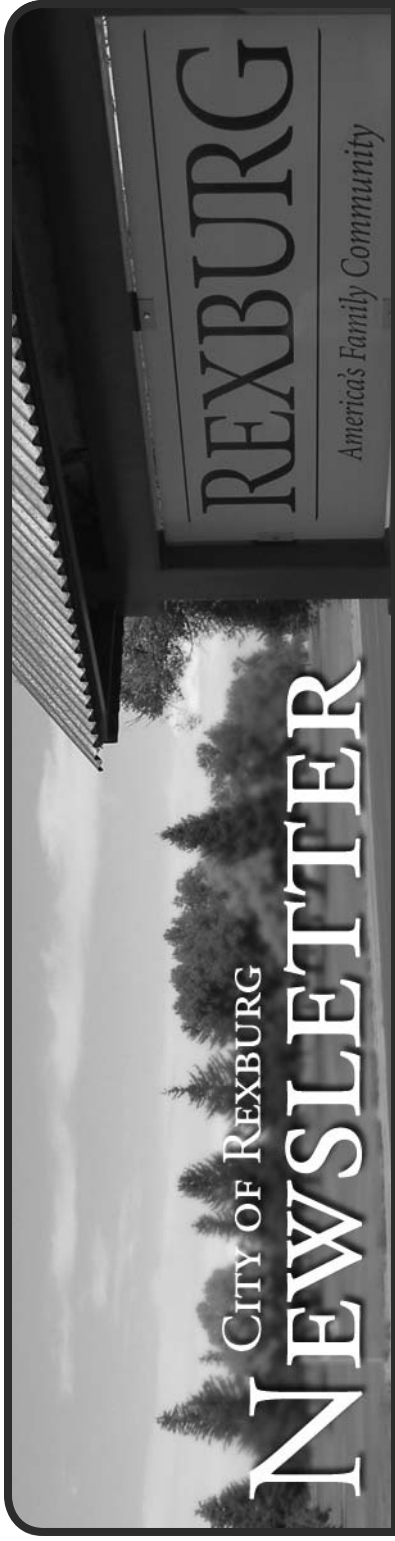

Also, feel free to contact me with your concerns and feedback.

Thanks,

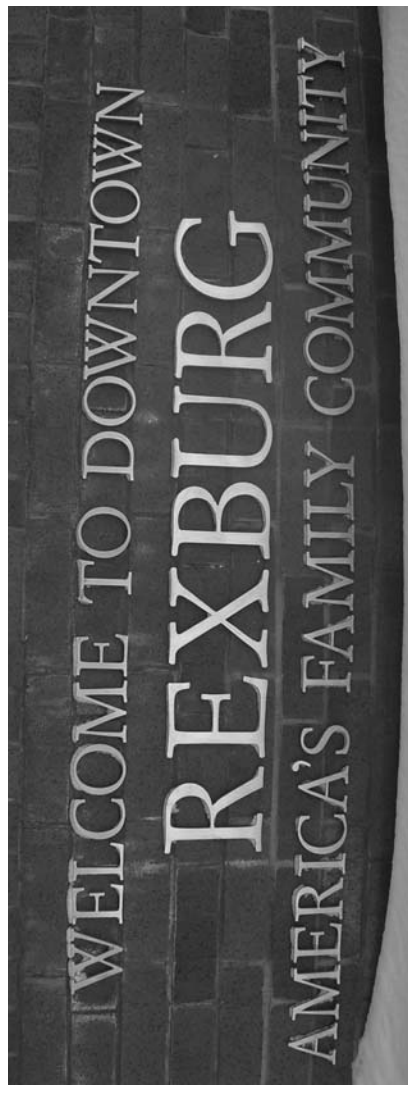

Adam Stout, Councilman

Codification of Ordinances

Learning the words of government

Codification is the process of collecting and restating the law of a jurisdiction in certain areas, usually by subject, forming a legal code.

The majority of Rexburg Ordinances have been codified into one document called the Rexburg Municipal Code.

The Rexburg Municipal Code is available on the City of Rexburg web site at www.rexburg.org.
